

A note about Atlantis and Hyperborea

Panduka Karounakaran

Last month, we received from Mr. Charles Upton his article, Atlantis and Hyperborea. Even though it was well explained numerous times that Mr. Upton and his writings are not welcome, being – it seems to us – under the influence of some very dubious forces, he keeps trying to confuse the readers.

The article's title in full is outrageous: ATLANTIS AND HYPERBOREA: An Inquiry into the Cyclical Mysteries with a Reconsideration of René Guénon's Rendition of the Cycle of Manifestation in Traditional Forms and Cosmic Cycles, The King of the World, and the Reign of Quantity and the Signs of the Times. Not only the title is absurdly lengthy, but also it is thoroughly insulting to René Guénon, with whom the text has nothing in common. As a matter of fact, the whole article has nothing to do with its title.

Mr. Upton does not say anything in his piece of writing, the level of his work being that of the elementary school in North America. Somewhere in the text, the author states that he underwent a Hyperborean initiation in his dream, a very gross absurdity and aberration.

We regret being forced to read the article, but we assure you that there was no mental effort needed to do so.
