

A note on “René Guénon, an Introduction”

Monegasqueca

Some time ago was brought to my attention an article called “René Guénon, an Introduction” posted on a site labeled The Hermetic Garden, by Mateus N. Carneiro da Cunha, the author stating that he is a tarologist, an astrologer, etc., that is, somebody about whom Guénon told us to stay away.

The article brings nothing to the reader, but the same profane and superficial considerations, products of the modern and antitraditonal mentality, and obviously it is not worthy for someone to spend time reading the three or four pages of banalities and aberrations. I wrote this note only because one of the visitors of Oriens launched a site named Projet René Guénon, and he thought it was a good idea to post da Cunha’s article there; I am just a student in the traditional domain but for me such a frivolous and impulsive act cuts down any desire to visit this site again.

And I should say to those who, instead of doing something more suitable with their own nature, continue to pollute Guénon’s work: Shuf shughlek, yâ khawaga!, René Guénon’s exact words.
